2. Citations and explanations (Rule 70.7)

The claimed invention relates to a method and an equipment for adapting a timer setting to a propagation delay on a data link associated with a digital mobile communication system.

The object of the invention is to improve the connection quality due to propagation delay in a data call in a digital mobile communication system.

This is achieved by measuring the propagation delay associated with a connection section and setting the timer value of the timer associated with the GSM system RLP protocol to a proper value. The measurement procedure consists of measuring the time that has elapsed from the moment of transmission of a frame, until the arrival of an acknowledgement of the reception of the sent frame.

Supplemental Box

(To be used when the space in any of the preceding boxes is not sufficient)

Continuation of: V

The cited documents disclose different solutions using a delay timer to compensate between different propagation delays, which relate to multipoint transmission instead of relating to point- to point transmission. The cited documents represent the general state of the art, but are not considered to be of particular relevance.

Thus, the claimed invention in claims 1-14 is novel and fulfils the requirements of inventive step and industrial applicability.
